

What is a Peer Support Specialist?

Peer Support Specialists help support your mental and behavioral health

A Peer Support Specialist (PSS) provides support to another person who shares a similar life experience. The Peer Support Specialist and their client may both share the experience of living with addiction. The PSS and their client may both share the experience of living with a mental health condition. A PSS and their client may both share the experience of having family members who live with mental health conditions.

Peer Support Specialists are trained and certified through the Oregon Health Authority's Traditional Health Worker (THW) certification. Peer Support Specialists work in a variety of settings.

Peer Support Specialists walk beside you during your journey. They listen to you. They offer context for your unique recovery experience. Peer support involves listening, mutual learning, respect, and hope.

You can get peer support in many ways. You may get support through telephone calls, group get-togethers, or online platforms. You may also get help through training or one-to-one support. Trillium members can have access to Peer Support Specialists at no cost.

There are four types of Peer Support Specialists:

- Peer Adult Mental Health Specialist: A person with lived experience of a mental health condition. They provide support to other people with similar experiences.
- Youth Support Specialist: A person who is 30 years old or younger. They may have lived experience with foster care or juvenile justice systems. They may have been unhoused, have learning disabilities, or faced barriers to education. They may have addiction or mental health conditions. Youth Support Specialists help youth by providing youth-to-youth peer support.
- Family Support Specialist: A person who has lived experience parenting a child who may have faced challenges such as living in foster care or being unhoused. They may have cared for children with learning disabilities, addiction, or mental health conditions. Family Support Specialists help parents and families who have children with complex needs.
